Dear Friends

The past month has certainly reminded us of the passage of life, particularly as we welcomed Lydia Linaker in baptism just as we were saying farewell to John Paul, gone from us, we may be certain, into the nearer vision of God. In fact, the onset of autumn brings us again to a great season of remembering – so variously represented by All Saints' and All Souls' Days, The Gunpowder Treason, as it used to be called, and Remembrance Sunday. And this year, they all fit into a week!

Remembering is not a negative activity; it can be one of the most effective and joyful ways of sharing with others, especially with those whose memories are long. I was greatly impressed on a recent visit to Corstorphine Hospital to be introduced to the "Remembering Room", a quiet room furnished as a sitting room of about 1950, which was both calming and stimulating to the elderly person I was visiting.

As we remember and publicly acknowledge the contribution that previous generations of Christians have given to our communities, I would warmly recommend "Exploring All Saints, All Souls and Remembrance". This two hour workshop, memorably taking place on November 5(!), will explore the history of All Saints and All Souls, and reflect on the special opportunity the church has to hear the stories, hold the memories and to pray for those we hold dear. It should appeal to those visiting the older members and also to those who work with children and would like ideas for intergenerational exchange of stories within the congregation. Please see the advertisement elsewhere in Gloria, and pick up an application in the Church.

In conclusion, I'm very pleased to be able to pass on the warm thanks of the Linaker family for the way they were made welcome at Lydia's Baptism, and further thanks from the Grassmarket Mission for the very useful bootload of food I was able to take them after the Harvest Festival. The church was even more beautiful than usual that day, and the efficiency with which the flowers were dispatched to our shut-ins was only equalled by the efficiency with which five fabulous soups and even more puddings were dispensed!

So my thanks, too, to you all!
Bob

(Sermon at the Baptism of Lydia Linaker – remembering John Paul)

James 5. 13-20: “Let [the elders] pray over the sick man, and the Lord will raise him up, and if he has committed sins, he will be forgiven.”

Mark 9.38-50: Jesus said, “Do not forbid him; for no one who does a mighty work in my name will be able soon after to speak evil of me. For he that is not against us is for us.”

Today is one of those days of deep symbolism; there is something particularly significant about being able to welcome in Baptism a new member into the Church of Christ as we mark the passage of another from this world to the more perfect vision of the glory of God. What that vision is we cannot know here. The Bible gives us fascinating hints, but makes it pretty clear that it is beyond anything that we can here comprehend. But whatever the next world may be, it is here that we live now and prepare for it. And, there is probably no more down-to-earth part of the NT than the Letter of James which we are now reading. James was obviously upset and annoyed by arguments in the Christian Community about the exact details of faith as a concept. He is passionately concerned with the idea that you don't proclaim Christ by talking about concepts, you proclaim Christ by living as Christ taught, in two words, by “being good”. That is the message for all of us as it was for John Paul and as we trust it will be for Lydia.

Being good is always difficult, partly because there are twice as many ways to be bad as to be good! Good is an action done in the right way at the right time and to the right extent, and we can fail just as badly by doing too much of anything as by doing too little. The wonderful and frightening fact of being a Christian has at least four aspects: it gives power, it gives opportunity, it gives responsibility and it gives danger. And that applies both to our life in relationship to the world outside, and equally to our life as a community together. We have, as James points out, a duty both to ask for help and to give it.

James, as I have said, is above all others the book of the NT that is concerned with conduct - with works or actions which show that faith means something. The congregation to which he is speaking appears to have been living in what we often today call parallel universes where some aspects of our lives make no contact with others. In particular, he says that our prayers are not answered because we fail to see the connection between the relationship we expect God to have with us, and the relationship we have with others.

The relationship we have with others is often brought home more clearly by a visit to a different society. For Sheila and me, this came on a visit to Durban, in South Africa, a few years ago. South Africa is a sort of microcosm of our world. The rich are very rich and the poor are very poor; the rich tend to be white, and the poor tend to be black, just as they are in the whole world. The rich use computers and manage corporations, while the poor try to sell things, often hampered by the fact that they can't do simple addition, and are confused if a customer actually wants to buy more than one thing at a time. At first it seems surprising that people can grow accustomed to having this disparity in front of their faces - that is, it is surprising until we realize that that is exactly how we live! In this age of rapid communication, we cannot pretend that we have no idea what is happening elsewhere, or that those not immediately under our noses are not those with whom we should, in James's words, be making peace.

The problem of the "parallel universe" is particularly plain in the gospel, where we have the picture of the disciples complaining about their "authority" being undermined, while Jesus needs to point out that real power is the ability to serve, and has huge risks. The gospel keeps trying to push us to think more widely, while we concentrate on what we want to see, and what is usually trivial. Instead, it reminds us of what is often called the "Christian double standard": while we must interpret the actions of others as generously as possible, we must be much more severe with ourselves. Do not spend time looking at the faults of others; your own faults are interesting enough. "Temptation" here is the desire to do things which destroy community. We may well be the ones who are destroying it by making things difficult for others ("these little ones") or we may be tempted to become busily engaged in community breaking ourselves. The three parts of the body Jesus mentions, eye, hand and foot, are often considered the main instruments of temptation. We may sin as a result of what we see, of what we do, or of where we go.

A highlight of our stay in Durban was a Sunday service in a vibrant, multi-racial congregation, where the sermon was preached (in Portuguese) by the black Bishop-elect of Angola, and translated by the (white) Bishop-elect of Niassa in Mozambique (Mark van Koevering, who, incidentally, was a great friend of John Paul's, and has preached here); he urged us to pray that the Angolans, faithful through years of war, would not now lose faith with the coming of peace. As they have a chance to see the material wealth about them, could they remember that sin is real and that it is in each of us and not merely something general in our society. I cannot disagree with that, but we here in the wealthy North must also remember that the general wickedness of society does involve us all, and that the suffering of others is often to satisfy our own covetousness.

As Christians in every situation, we have God with us, and we are empowered, and our power gives us opportunities, responsibilities and dangers. The last word today, though, should go to James, in his instructions about the sick: They should call for the elders of the church, and have them pray over them, anointing them with oil in the name of the Lord. In this teaching about healing, he presents neatly the duty to ask as well as the duty to respond. Oil, which makes our machinery run and our food palatable, becomes the symbol of healing, of bringing together, of understanding. Prayer, to which we will shortly turn, and the oil with which we will shortly be anointing Lydia as part of her baptism, are the keys to bringing our universes together in true healing and peace.

ANNUAL MEMORIAL SERVICE

This year's service, in which we remember those who have died, will be held on Sunday 1st November (All Saints Day) at 6pm and will be instead of the usual Evensong.

If you would like to have someone remembered by name in our prayers, there will be prayer cards available at the back of the church for you to complete from Sunday 25th October.

The service will be followed by tea or coffee at the back of the church.

I hope you will be able to support this short service of thanksgiving by being part of it. Please bring your family and friends too. You are all welcome.

Lydia Linaker 27th September, 2009

Letter received by Sheena Wood

Beaconsfield House,
Haddington,

29th September, 2009

Dear Sheena,

David and I would like to thank everyone at Holy Trinity for being so welcoming to us all at the Service and the Baptism of Lydia. It was a moment of great joy to us to be able to be present and join the family in this first important step in Lydia's life. We felt she had been received into a circle of friendship and warmth, and with Godparents who will care for her spiritual up-bringing. I hope she will have many opportunities in the future to attend Holy Trinity, on visits to Haddington, which has been home to other members of our family for over 40 years now.

Thank you again for a memorable and wonderful experience.

Yours very sincerely

Jill and David (Lydia's Grandparents)

PLEASE HELP SOLVE OUR MYSTERY

For several months now our Bank Statement shows a donation by BACS Neither Jean, our Gift Aid Secretary, or myself can trace the donor. Please help - you may hold the vital clue.

The statement entry is "MRS ELIZABETH WILS CHURCH". Who is she ? It is not Liz Wilson and no-one on our roll that we can see. Sometimes we receive donations via a relative or solicitor.

We are grateful just for the donation but we do need to correspond about tax relief and to thank her..

Perhaps members of congregation can help, or better still, Mrs Wils, please identify yourself!

Haddington Twinning Association

If you have an interest in France and things French do please come along to our OPEN EVENING and brief AGM in the Town House Haddington on Wednesday, 18th November at 7.30pm when you will have an opportunity to find out more about our activities and our twin town of Aubigny.

We are keen to involve more people in the association and would love to see some new faces.

The speaker for the evening is Jancis Gay. Jancis and her husband spend the summer months travelling in France and exploring the countryside. They are both sailors and most of their travelling is done in their boat. Her talk promises to be very interesting.

Do please come and join us for a glass of wine — French of course.

GREAT BIG CELEBRATION OF MUSIC AND YOUTH, THE ORGAN FUND CONCERT

That evening in Holy Trinity, we put our cares aside and listened to playing and singing so good that it has to be the result of much practising by the musicians, with the obvious encouragement and inspiration of their teachers. I loved it all from the confident singing of Sarah and Olivia to the small boy who played percussion with total commitment.

This was not a school concert, all the musicians were present voluntarily, and it was great to be reminded that not all "Youths" are anti-social hooligans, whatever the papers say. Thanks to all concerned for netting £490 for our organ repairs whilst giving such pleasure.
